

Competition in the media is critical. No matter how well intended, concentration of ownership will lead to a narrowing of coverage and the ability of various points of view to be expressed in public. Additionally, concentration will mean remote ownership, editorship, and programing, resulting in less local coverage and point of view.